Background:

Civilizational Dialogue is Considered one of the Most Important Means of achieving convergence between different perspectives and bridging the gap between Western and Arab feminist issues. This is in order to develop a future vision that meets the aspirations of women and enhances their active role in all fields. From this perspective, the Hamsa Sama Cultural Organization launched the Women and Dialogue of Civilizations project, where the preliminary conference was held in 2018 at the headquarters of the European Union building in London, followed by the first conference in the history of Arab women held at the Danish Parliament in 2019, with distinguished attendees.

Why the Women's Conference and Dialogue of Civilizations?

Given the changes the world is currently experiencing, from economic crises, wars, and migrations that have cast their shadows on women in their communities, reviewing laws and legislation that guarantee their protection and rights in line with these changes requires more consultation and dialogue to come up with visions that support the cultural development of women and ensure their ability to confront these challenges. There are many examples that reports from women's rights organizations have identified, highlighting the importance of reviewing women's rights, duties, and legislation around the world to protect and empower them to a greater extent. Therefore, empowering women is an important and difficult equation of civilization, but it is necessary to establish clear foundations for women's empowerment. Since knowledge is the basis of development in any field, this conference was held with high scientific gathering to cover the topics of this conference.
